Introduction

For most CPA firm leaders, solving problems and helping clients are the reasons why they went into the profession. Managing a CPA firm often takes second place. However, only by spending time and energy on a range of firm-management issues will CPA firm leaders continue to be in a position to help their clients.

This report provides CPA firm leaders with important insights into how their peers are handling five of the most critical issues in firm management:

- The structure and governance models firms are using to manage their operations;
- The partner compensation and retirement programs firms have developed to ensure that partners and other key firm members receive fair rewards;
- Leadership development and succession;
- Recruiting, retaining, and developing talented staff;
- Future issues facing CPA firms, including economic pressures, the challenges facing the profession, globalization, and the outsourcing question.

Finally, a series of five case studies explains how specific CPA firms are dealing with each of these issues.

Information presented in this report comes from the results of the CPA Firm Critical Issues Survey, which was conducted from the fall of 2008 to early 2009. The survey received 87 responses from owners and other leaders at CPA firms around the U.S.; in some cases, multiple re-
